QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Judgment was entered in Petitioners' favor on July 13, 1994. Respondents filed motions under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50 (b) and 59, but did not effect timely service. Nonetheless, the trial court granted judgment as a matter of law (JMOL) in favor of Respondents and ordered a new trial under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) (Rule 50(b)). On December 1, 1995, Rule 50(b) was amended to provide that post-trial motions only needed to be filed, not served, within ten days of a judgment. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit retroactively applied amended Rule 50(b) and held, despite untimely service of the Rule 50(b) motion, the trial court had jurisdiction to grant JMOL and order a new trial and dismissed petitioners' appeal. Under this scenario, the questions presented are:

1. May amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b), effective December 1, 1995, be applied retroactively to a case in which judgment was entered on July 13, 1994, when to do so would attach new legal consequences to actions already completed, deny Petitioners their substantive and vested rights to judgment that had become final by operation of law and passage of time, and retroactively vest the trial court with jurisdiction to grant JMOL and order a new trial when that jurisdiction would clearly have been lacking under pre-amendment Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b)?

2. In a personal injury action tried under federal diversity jurisdiction, may a trial court, under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b), grant JMOL in favor of Respondents on an "issue" (i.e. damages for a certain type of injury) when Petitioners' "claim" (negligence) remains provable in the absence of the such "issue", when Respondent failed to properly preserve issues in its Rule 50(a) motion and failed to request specific instructions on such issues?

LIST OF PARTIES

Petitioners are Ruth and John Hopkins, husband and wife, (hereinafter Hopkins) (Plaintiffs in the District Court and Appellees in the Court of Appeals). Additional Plaintiffs below filing separate petitions are Deborah Williams, David Schudel, Timothy Schudel, Sandra Schudel, Daniel Glass, Craig Thompson, Kathrene Froese and Merlin Carlson, Jr.

Respondents in this court (Defendants in the District Court and both Appellee and Appellants in the Court of Appeals) are General Electric Company and Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corporation/Kaiser Aluminum Corporation (hereinafter collectively referred to as "G.E.").

LIST PURSUANT TO RULE 29.6

According to its prior corporate disclosure statements, the General Electric Company is a publicly held corporation with no parent companies. Its subsidiaries and affiliates are General Electric Capital Corporation; General Electric Credit International, N.V.; Montgomery Ward and Company, Inc.; General Electric Preferred Asset Corporation; CAMCO, Inc. ARGUMENT FOR GRANTING THE WRIT 8

I. The Ninth Circuit's retroactive application of Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) as amended, effective December 1, 1995, under the facts of this case, is in conflict with decisions of this court, notably Landgraf v. U.S.I. Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 128 L.Ed.2d 29, 114 S.Ct. 1488 (1994) and Hughes Aircraft v. United States, ex rel. William J. Schumer, 520 U.S. ___, 138 L.Ed.2d 135, 117 S.Ct. 1871 (1997), is in conflict with another decision of the Ninth Circuit, Chenault v. United States Postal Service, 37 F.3d 535 (9th Cir. 1994) and a decision of the Seventh Circuit, Pro Football Weekly, Inc. v. Gannett Co., Inc., 988 F.2d 723 (7th Cir. 1993) 8

II. The Ninth Circuit's retroactive application of amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) was in error as this case was not "pending" on the effective date of the amended Rule 50(b) and retroactive application of amended Rule 50(b) is neither "just" nor "practicable" 15

III. The Ninth Circuit's retroactive application of amended Rule 50(b) violates the judicial doctrine favoring finality of judgments..... 20

IV. Retroactive application of amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b), violates the Fifth and Seventh Amendments of the U.S. Constitution and the Rules Enabling Act, 28 USC Sec. 2072 23

V. The trial court lacked jurisdiction to grant JMOL and the Ninth Circuit erred in failing to ascertain whether the trial court properly acted in granting JMOL 25

VI. The trial court erred in granting JMOL under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) as G.E. failed to preserve issues under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(a)..... 27

VII. The trial court lacked jurisdiction to vacate the judgment and order a new trial 28

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

John and Ruth Hopkins, husband and wife, plaintiffs below and Petitioners herein (hereinafter Hopkins), respectfully pray that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, entered on July 23, 1997, and affirmed by order filed November 24, 1997, denying Hopkins' petition for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc. Petitioners submit that the Ninth Circuit's rulings below are appropriate for this Court's consideration for the reasons that the Ninth Circuit's decision has decided on important federal question that has not, but should be, decided by this Court, namely the retroactivity of an amended Federal Rule of Civil Procedure (Rule 50(b)). In so deciding, the Ninth Circuit's decision is in conflict with prior decisions of this Court, prior decisions of the Seventh Circuit, as well as prior decisions within its own circuit. The Ninth Circuit's decision also represents a departure from the usual and accepted course of judicial proceedings, or sanctions the trial court's departure from usual and accepted proceedings in such a manner as to warrant the exercise of this court's supervisory power.

OPINIONS BELOW

The judgments rendered at the trial court level and rulings by the trial court which give rise to the appeal to the Ninth Circuit are set forth at App. D (judgment of July 13, 1994); App. C (as applied to Petitioners Hopkins, pertinent portions of trial court ruling of November 25, 1994; App. F (trial court order of January 17, 1995) and App. E (Amended Judgment of November 25, 1994). The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, that gives rise to this petition is Schudel et al. v. General Electric Co., 120 F.3d 99 (9th Cir. 1997). App. A. By order filed November 24, 1997, the Ninth Circuit denied Hopkins' petition for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc. App. B.

JURISDICTION

This action was commenced on September 30, 1991 in the Spokane County, Washington Superior Court and thereafter removed by Defendants General Electric and Kaiser Aluminum (hereinafter collectively referred to as G.E.) to the Federal District Court, Eastern District of Washington based upon diversity of citizenship under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1332(a)(i). Following a 54 day jury trial, judgment was entered on July 13, 1994 in favor of Hopkins and others. App. D. G.E. filed its motion for judgment as a matter of law pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) (hereinafter Rule 50) and alternative motion for a new trial under Fed.R.Civ.P. 59 (hereinafter Rule 59) on July 27, 1994.[1]

[1] The record does not reflect that Hopkins and others were ever served with the post-trial motions as required by the rules. At trial and on appeal, Hopkins claimed ineffective service of these motions deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to rule on G.E.'s post trial motions. The Ninth Circuit concluded that the attempt to serve Hopkins by delivering the motions to a private delivery service was ineffective and therefore untimely, citing to Magnuson v. Video Yesteryear, 85 F.3d 1424, 1431 (9th Cir. 1996).

G.E. did not file a notice of appeal challenging the July 13, 1994 judgment.

On November 25, 1994, the trial court, without oral argument, granted judgment as a matter of law (hereinafter JMOL) in favor of G.E. and ordered a new trial under Rule 50(b) despite arguments by Hopkins and others that it lacked jurisdiction to rule on said motions. The trial court denied G.E.'s Rule 59 motions in their entirety. App. E and F.

Hopkins appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1291. The Ninth Circuit issued its opinion on July 23, 1997. Schudel et al. v. General Electric Co., 120 F.3d 991 (9th Cir. 1997). App. A (hereinafter Shudel). Thereafter, on November 24, 1997, the Ninth Circuit denied Hopkins timely filed motion for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc. App. B.

Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 13.1 and 13.3, this petition for certiorari has been filed within 90 days of the denial of rehearing. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS, STATUTES, AND COURT RULES INVOLVED

Due to the lengthy nature of the material, the full text of the following Constitutional provisions, statutes and court rules are set forth in App. G:

The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution

The Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution

28 U.S.C. Sec. 2072

Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(a) (1994 version.)

Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) (1993 and 1995 amended versions.)

Fed.R.Civ.P. 59 (1966 and 1995 amended versions.)

Supreme Court Order dated April 27, 1995 adopting amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50 and 59.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiffs John and Ruth Hopkins, husband and wife, employees of Qualified Personnel, Inc. (QPI), worked at the Kaiser Aluminum plant in Spokane, Washington in the fall of 1988. Kaiser Aluminum contracted with G.E. to clean up a PCB-contaminated room at its Spokane plant and G.E. in turn contracted with QPI to provide personnel, including the Hopkins, to work at the clean-up. Several toxic chemicals and detergents were used in the clean-up. In brief, the harmful effects of these agents were well known to G.E. and the proof at trial established that G.E. failed to take appropriate steps to protect the Hopkins from harmful levels of exposure to these agents. The Hopkins suffered severe and permanent injuries as a result and thereafter commenced a cause of action based in negligence and loss of consortium for injuries each received as well as for injury to their respective spouse.

Each Hopkins was exposed to chemicals and detergents in sufficient amounts to have produced a permanent respiratory ailment diagnosed as Reactive Airways Dysfunction Syndrome or Reactive Airways Disease Syndrome (RADS).[2] Mrs. Hopkins became so ill she was hospitalized for three days. Secondary to RADS, Mrs. Hopkins suffered from a severe, permanent depression, which required medication and extensive psychotherapy. Mrs. Hopkins, due to her depression and RADS, was unemployable. The evidence further showed Mrs. Hopkins had memory and concentration problems as a result of her depression. Both Hopkins will be predisposed to future respiratory infections as a result of RADS and Mr. Hopkins must work in an irritant free environment, thus limiting future employment prospects.

Unchallenged trial testimony showed that the Hopkins' lifestyles were severely impaired and their injuries restricted their ability to enjoy the lifestyle they once enjoyed as individuals and as a married couple.

G.E. contended that the exposure, if any, was insufficient to have caused injury, and that the Hopkins' smoking history caused their respiratory ailments.

After 54 days in trial, the case went to the jury on special verdict forms as to each Plaintiff.[3] Neither party sought to have the jury instructed to award damages on the basis of each individual injury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of John Hopkins of $1,348,020.00 for compensatory damages, and $602,250.00 for his loss of consortium and a verdict for Ruth Hopkins of $1,404,040.00 as compensatory damages and $602,250.00 for her loss of consortium. Judgment from the verdict was entered on July 13, 1994. App. D.

G.E. filed its Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) and alternative motion for a new trial under Fed.R.Civ.P. 59 on July 27, 1994.[4] On November 25, 1994, the trial court, without oral argument, denied Hopkins' and others motions regarding untimely service and granted judgment in favor of G.E.[5] The trial court denied G.E.'s motion for a new trial under Fed.R.Civ.P. 59 in its entirety and certified this case for appeal pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(b).

Hopkins appealed to the Ninth Circuit, alleging the trial court lacked jurisdiction to grant judgment as a injuries. Each claimed, and the jury was specially instructed on the issue of loss of consortium as to each spouse. Each testified as to the tremendous loss of companionship and intimacy they suffered as a result of the respiratory injury to the other.

[4] July 27, 1994 was the 10th judicial day following entry of the judgment and thus the last day to file and effect service under then existing Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) and 59. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 6.

[5] While acknowledging the evidence sustained respiratory injury caused by G.E.'s negligence, and resulting loss of consortium, the trial court ruled that both Hopkins made a "claim" for brain damage which was not proven. Hopkins disputes this finding. Thus, the trial court felt the unproven "claim" for brain damage "tainted" the jury verdict and ordered a new trial. See App. C.

matter of law (hereinafter JMOL) and a new trial under Rule 50(b).

The Ninth Circuit dismissed the Hopkins appeal, reasoning that it lacked jurisdiction to consider an appeal as the negligence claims were not "final" and the new trial order was interlocutory in nature. App. A. The Ninth Circuit, by order dated November 24, 1997, denied Hopkins' timely filed petition for rehearing. App. B.

For reasons that follow hereafter, the Ninth Circuit's decision dismissing the appeal, affirming the trial court's grant of JMOL and order for a new trial should be reversed and plaintiff Hopkins' verdicts reinstated, together with interest from July 13, 1994 until paid.[6] [6] Hopkins adopts, to the extent applicable, each and every argument of Plaintiffs/Petitioners listed in the Parties section, supra, insofar as the questions or issues presented, arguments made, or authorities being advanced by said parties in their Petitions for Certiorari being separately filed herein, may relate to issues in common. See Rules of U.S. Supreme Court, Rule 12(4).

ARGUMENT FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I.

The Ninth Circuit's retroactive application of Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) as amended, effective December 1, 1995, under the facts of this case, is in conflict with decisions of this court, notably Landgraf v. U.S.I. Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 128 L.Ed.2d 29, 114 S.Ct. 1488 (1994) and Hughes Aircraft v. United States, ex rel. William J. Schumer, 520 U.S. ___, 138 L.Ed.2d 135, 117 S.Ct. 1871 (1997), is in conflict with another decision of the Ninth Circuit, Chenault v. United States Postal Service, 37 F.3d 535 (9th Cir. 1994) and a decision of the Seventh Circuit, Pro Football Weekly, Inc. v. Gannett Co., Inc., 988 F.2d 723 (7th Cir. 1993).

The above cases hold that absent an express declaration to the contrary, amended statutes may not be applied retroactively in such a manner as to change the legal effect of conduct at the time it took place, especially when to do so is prejudicial to one of the parties or operates to deprive a party of a vested right. To prevent an unjust result in this case and to further assist courts in the future on issue of retroactivity of amended civil rules, as well as bring uniformity among circuits and this Court's decisions on the subject, this court should grant this petition.

Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit's decision in this case has decided an important question of federal law that has not been, but should be, decided by this Court, namely the retroactivity of an amended Federal Rule of Civil Procedure to a case that has been completed and in which judgment, under previous civil rules and case law became final.

The Ninth Circuit correctly ruled that G.E.'s post-trial motions were served in an untimely manner. 120 F.3d at 944. While this case was on appeal by Hopkins and others to the Ninth Circuit, challenging the trial court's authority to rule on untimely post-trial motions, Rule 50(b) and Rule 59 were amended, effective December 1, 1995, to provide that post-trial motions are timely if filed within 10 days of judgment.[7] Under the version of Rule 50(b) in effect at the time that this case was concluded and judgment entered, it was settled law that failure to serve and file post-trial motions on or before the 10th day following judgment deprived the trial court of jurisdiction rule on the motions. Cone v. West Virginia Pulp and Paper Co., 330 U.S. 212, 217, 91 L.Ed. 849, 67 S.Ct. 752 (1946).[8]

Despite finding service of G.E.'s post-trial motions untimely under the pre-1995 version of Rule 50(b), and in apparent disregard for the above authority, the Ninth Circuit retroactively applied the amended 1995 version of Rule 50(b) to this case, noting at 120 F.3d 994:

[7] The full text of Fed.R.Civ.P. Rule 50(b) and 59, prior to and after the 1995 amendments, is set forth in App. G.

[8] See also Johnson v. New York, New Haven and Hartford R.R. Co., 344 U.S. 48, 97 L.Ed. 77, 73 S.Ct. 125 (1952) (Requirement of a timely application for judgment under Rule 50 is firmly grounded in principles of fairness); Browder v. Department of Corrections, 434 U.S. 257, 264, 98 S.Ct. 556, 561, 54 L.Ed.2d 521 (1978); Thompson v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, (Clark, J. Dissenting), 375 U.S. 384, 11 L.Ed.2d 404, 407, 84 S.Ct. 397 (1964) (Post trial motions not timely served do not toll appellate deadlines.)

> This proceeding was pending on December 1, 1995, and no prejudice will result from application of the amendments. . . . We have applied amended federal rules of appellate procedure retroactively in similar circumstances, See Schroeder v. McDonald, 55 F.3d 454, 459-60 (9th Cir. 1995); Wallis v. J.R. Simplot Co., 26 F.3d 885, 888 (9th Cir. 1994); and do so here.[9]

This holding conflicts with the notion deeply rooted in American jurisprudence that absent an express declaration that a statute or rule is to be applied retroactively, there is a strong presumption against its retroactive application. Hughes Aircraft, supra at 138 L.Ed.2d 146. In amended Rule 50(b), there is no clear expression of retroactivity. Rather, its provisions apply to cases filed after December 1, 1995 and to "pending" cases only "insofar as just and practicable." S.Ct. Order, Amendments to the Fed.R.Civ.P. (Apr. 27, 1995).

> As noted in Landgraf, (Scalia, J. concurring) at 269:
> . . . a procedural change should no more be presumed to be retroactive than a substantive one . . . Absent clear statement otherwise, only such relevant activity which occurs after the effective date of the statute is covered. (emphasis original)

[9] The flawed logic in this analysis is that but for the trial court exceeding its jurisdiction by ruling, contrary to existing case law, that it had jurisdiction to rule on the post-trial motions, this case would have not been "pending" on December 1, 1995, as there would be nothing to appeal. G.E. never filed a notice of appeal under Fed.R.App.P. 4 and Hopkins would not contest the verdict in their favor.

The Schudel court erred, much like the Ninth Circuit did in the Hughes Aircraft, supra case. This Court, in reversing the Ninth Circuit in the Hughes case, held that defining a statute as "jurisdictional" and thus "an exception to the general Landgraf presumption against retroactivity" is erroneous "for the only "presumption" mentioned in that opinion is a general presumption against retroactivity." Hughes Aircraft, supra at 138 L.Ed.2d 146.[10]

In this case, the Ninth Circuit's classification of the amendments to Rule 50(b) as merely jurisdictional or procedural disregards the holding of Landgraf, supra. Landgraf at 128 L.Ed.2d at 258-59 n.29, held that classifying a statute as "procedural" and thus automatically retroactive, is error, noting:

> Of course, the mere fact that a new rule is procedural does not mean that it applies to every pending case. . . . Our orders approving amendments to federal procedure rules reflect the common-sense notion that the applicability of such provisions ordinarily depends on the posture of a particular case . . . we do not restrict the presumption against retroactivity to those cases involving "vested rights" . . . Nor do we suggest that concerns about retroactivity have no application to procedural rules. (emphasis added)

In this case, amended Rule 50(b) operates much like the statute in question in Hughes. In both cases, the [10] Rule 50(b), while designated a procedural rule, takes on the aspects of a "jurisdictional" rule affecting vested and substantive rights of the parties, particularly when the trial court lacks jurisdiction based on an untimely post-trial motion.

amendments not only allocate "jurisdiction" among courts, but "create" jurisdiction where none previously existed. If a rule or statute, as amended, creates:

> . . . jurisdiction where none previously existed, it thus speaks not just to the power of a particular court but to the substantive rights of the parties as well. Such a statute, even though phrased in "jurisdictional" terms, is as much subject to a presumption against retroactivity as any other.
> Hughes Aircraft, supra at 146.

A statute has retroactive effect if, when applied, "the new provision attaches new legal consequences to events completed before its enactment." Landgraf, supra at 255. In this case, application of the "new provision" (filing only vs. filing and service) attaches new legal consequences of a severely prejudicial nature. Under pre-amended Rule 50(b), the trial court lost jurisdiction to rule as the motions were not timely filed and served. Retroactive application of the "new provision" (1995 version of Rule 50(b)) gave to the trial court jurisdiction to grant G.E.'s motions where none existed pre-amendment. The end result is that the Hopkins lost their judgments which had become final by passage of time. Thus, the "new legal consequences" are most severe.

The Ninth Circuit's opinion in this case is also seemingly at odds with its own decision in Chenault v. United States Postal Service, 37 F.3d 535, 539 (9th Cir. 1994), wherein the Chenault court noted:

> Regardless of whether a statute is "substantive" or "procedural", it may not apply to cases pending at the time of enactment if the new statute > would prejudice the rights of one of the parties. . . .

By applying the 1995 version of Rule 50(b) to this case, the Schudel court gave the trial court jurisdiction it had lost, thus allowing its JMOL and new trial order to stand. As a result, the Hopkins and others must bear the expense, uncertainty, and time involved in appeals and retrials. For this reason, and the fact that the Hopkins lost their right to judgment, Hopkins submits that the above language of Chenault has been violated. These factors clearly show that the Hopkins have been prejudiced by the Schudel court's application of amended Rule 50(b). In this respect, "[e]lementary considerations of fairness" and the "settled expectations" of the Hopkins were not just "lightly disrupted", they were completely trampled. Landgraf at 252.

Granting the petition in this case is also necessary due to an apparent conflict between the Ninth Circuit's opinion in this case and the Seventh Circuit's decision in Pro Football Weekly, Inc. v. Gannett Co., Inc., 988 F.2d 723 (7th Cir. 1993). In the Gannett case, the trial court applied Rule 50(b) as it was in effect on November 18, 1991 and granted a directed verdict in favor of Gannett on certain issues tried to a jury. Thereafter, Rule 50 was amended, effective December 1, 1991. On review, the Seventh Circuit held at 725:

> Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50 governs the process by which a directed verdict and a judgment notwithstanding the verdict (j.n.o.v.) may be obtained. This rule was amended on December 1, 1991; proceedings below were concluded prior to the rule's amendment and therefore we > are guided by the prior version of Rule 50, (emphasis added).

A like result is compelled here. In this case, the trial court proceedings were concluded 1½ years prior to the effective date of the 1995 version of Rule 50(b). In this case, as in the Gannett case, the fact that the matter was on appeal at the time the amended rule was effective did not mean the case was "pending" and therefore subject to a retroactive use of the amended version of Rule 50. The Gannett reasoning is consistent with the general presumption against retroactivity articulated in Landgraf and Hughes, whereas the Ninth Circuit's opinion in this case conflicts with that presumption.

Intervention by this court is necessary to harmonize inconsistent decisions among circuits regarding the retroactive application of an amended rule of civil procedure. Further, Petitioner's research disclosed no case in which this court has directly decided the retroactive nature of amended rules of civil procedure. As the decision by the Ninth Circuit in this case conflicts with the decisions of this court in the area of retroactivity, especially in such a way as to depart from the usual and accepted course of judicial procedure, this court should grant the petition to clarify the applicable law in this area.

II.

The Ninth Circuit's retroactive application of amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b), effective December 1, 1995, was error in that this case was not "pending" on the effective date of the amendment, nor would it be "just and practicable" to apply the amended rule to the facts of this case.

The Ninth Circuit's retroactive application of amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b), effective December 1, 1995, to the facts of this case, was in error as this case was not "pending" on the effective date of the amendment, nor is such application "just and practicable" as required by this Court's order, dated April 27, 1995 at 131 L.Ed.2d xcii, adopting the amended rules. In this respect, the Ninth Circuit has addressed an important federal question, which has not, but should be addressed by this court. Specifically, this court should determine whether a case was "pending" and what circumstances fall within the "just and practicable" language above in deciding the extent that the amended Rule 50(b) may be applied retroactively. In addition, the Ninth Circuit has further departed from the usual and accepted course of judicial proceedings in such a manner as to warrant the exercise of this Court's supervisory power.

This case was not "pending" on the effective date of the amended Rule 50(b), December 1, 1995.

Amended Rule 50(b) may apply to cases that are "pending" on the effective date of the amendments if to do so would be "just and practicable". S.Ct. Order, Amendments to Fed.R.Civ.P. (Apr. 27, 1995). In this case, Hopkins and others contended that untimely service of post-trial motions under Rules 50(b) and 59 deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to address said motions. Had the trial court properly ruled on November 25, 1994, as was ultimately determined by the Ninth Circuit, that the post-trial motions were not timely served, it would have been, by law, without jurisdiction to rule on the pending motions. Browder v. Department of Corrections, supra.[11]

Judgment was entered in Plaintiff's favor on July 13, 1994. Timely filing and service of post-trial motions were required, under then existing versions of Rule 50(b) and Rule 59, no later than July 27, 1994. Only the timely filing and service of these motions would toll the time for G.E. to appeal from this judgment. Under Fed.R.App.P. 4(a)(1), G.E. had 30 days to file a notice of appeal from judgment, or until August 12, 1994. G.E. never filed a notice of appeal from this judgment at any time. As such, this judgment became irrevocably final on August 13, 1994.[12]

This case was not "pending" for purposes of application of amended Rule 50(b), as Hopkins and others were [11] In this respect, Hopkins' right to judgment was lost when the trial court improperly exercised jurisdiction predicated on untimely served motions. Hopkins' only redress was to file an appeal. Instead of securing relief, the Ninth Circuit ruled that in appealing, Hopkins caused the case to be "pending" on December 1, 1995. As if this were not enough, this injustice was taken full circle by the Ninth Circuit's retroactive grant of "jurisdiction" to the trial court by applying amended Rule 50(b).

[12] Fed.R.App.P. 4 was amended in 1993 to provide that premature notices of appeal would be held in abeyance pending post-trial rulings by the trial court. Even with this option, G.E. gambled that it had tolled the appeal deadlines with its post-trial motions, and elected not to appeal the July 13, 1994 judgment. As such, this judgment was final on August 13, 1994.

forced to appeal to contest the power of the District Court to enter judgment in the first instance, notwithstanding untimely served post-trial motions.[13] To hold that this case is "pending" by the existence of an appeal, under the facts of this case, negates the principle that the law in effect at the time of the conduct should govern absent clear expression to the contrary. Landgraf, supra.

B.

Retroactive application of Rule 50(b) as amended is neither "just" nor "practicable".

Statutes are not to be applied retroactively if such an application will prejudice one of the parties. Chenault, supra. In addition, if retroactive application of a law will affect the "substantive" or "vested" rights of a party, even if it is deemed procedural in nature, retroactivity is not favored. Landgraf, supra. By restoring jurisdiction to the trial court, while simultaneously rewarding G.E. for non-compliance with the service deadline in then Rule 50(b), the Ninth Circuit has made the prejudicial and unjust nature of the retroactivity in this case obvious. The end result is that Hopkins and others lost their vested rights to a judgment which, based on the lapse of time to file an appeal (30 days), became final. It would be difficult to [13] The Ninth Circuit's determination that this case was "pending" is only made possible by the fact that Hopkins and others were forced to appeal the trial court's lack of jurisdiction. It seems anomalous that Hopkins had to contest, by way of appeal, the trial court's lack of jurisdiction and this very fact becomes the reason the case is "pending" and subject to retroactive application of a rule, resulting in the trial court regaining jurisdiction it previously lost under the pre-1995 rule.

imagine a more unfair result, particularly when the Schudel court ruled the case was "pending" because Hopkins appealed the lack of the trial court's jurisdiction in the first place.

The Ninth Circuit did little or no analysis as to whether it was "just and practicable" under the "posture of the particular case", Landgraf, supra, to retroactively apply amended Rule 50(b) to this case.[14] Clearly, plaintiffs have been prejudiced in that their vested and substantive right to a judgment, which had theretofore become final, was lost by application of a rule enacted one and a half years after trial and applied by an appellate court three years after trial. The conduct in question, untimely service, and its effect of depriving the trial court of jurisdiction, had long since come and gone.

The Ninth Circuit's opinion, "much like extending a statute of limitations after the pre-existing period of limitations has expired, impermissibly revives a moribund cause of action (see, e.g., Chenault v. U.S. Postal Service, 37 F.3d 535, 537, 539 (CA 9, 1994)", Hughes Aircraft, supra, L.Ed.2d at 146. Such a result is hardly "just".

[14] Retroactive application of amended Rule 50(b) would be beneficial for G.E. as it allows it to escape the harsh impact occasioned by application of strict rules setting jurisdictional timelines. But that does not necessarily make it "just". In the end, any erosion of the principle of finality harms G.E. and all other actual or potential litigants. The doctrine of finality of litigation and strict adherence to timelines of a jurisdictional nature requires a finding that this rule, as amended, not be given retroactive effect. See Browder v. Dept. of Corrections, supra and Carlisle v. United States, 517 U.S. 416, 134 L.Ed.2d 613, 116 S.Ct. 1460 (1996).

Clearly, on these facts, there was a definitive change in the "substance of the extant cause of action". Hughes Aircraft at 146. Just as a subsequent amendment to a statute of limitation will not revive a time-barred claim, subsequent amendment of a rule of civil procedure may not revive a time-barred post-trial motion.[15] This Court recently affirmed the Landgraf principles in Hughes Aircraft, supra at 143, noting:

> "The principle that the legal effect of conduct should ordinarily be assessed under the law that existed when the conduct took place has timeless and universal appeal." Hughes Aircraft at 143 (emphasis added).

Applying this rule to the facts at hand, the "legal effect of conduct" at issue (untimely compliance with pre-1995 Rule 50(b) and Rule 59 filing and service requirements) would be, as it has been for decades, that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to rule on said motions. Likewise, G.E. would be precluded, save for a timely appeal, from challenging the judgment. To allow retroactive application of Rule 50(b) in this case becomes "unjust", as it changes the "legal effect of the conduct" after it had occurred.

[15] See e.g., Bulgo v. Munoz, 853 F.2d 710, 715 (9th Cir. 1988) (declining to give retroactive effect to amendment of statutes of limitations which would have revived plaintiff's barred claim; Davis v. Valley Distrib. Co., 522 F.2d 827, 830 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. den'd, 429 U.S. 1090, 97 S.Ct. 1099, 51 L.Ed.2d 535 (1977) (general rule that subsequent extensions of statute of limitation period will not revive a claim previously barred). Chenault v. United States Postal Service, supra at 539 (new statute of limitation will not revive claim barred under prior law-to do so would "alter the substantive rights" of a party.)

In discussing the retroactive application of an amended rule to cure invalid service, the court in United States v. 51 Pieces of Real Property in Roswell, NM, 17 F.3d 1306, 1312 (10th Cir. 1994), noted:

> Moreover, even if the provisions were otherwise retroactive, we doubt that they could retroactively validate service of process that was invalid when executed.[16]

Retroactive application of the 1995 version of Rule 50(b) in this case is also impracticable. To do so would require fabrication of jurisdiction for the trial court that had long been lost under the old rule.

III.

The Ninth Circuit's retroactive application of amended Rule 50(b) in this case violates the judicial doctrine favoring finality of judgments set forth in Browder v. Department of Corrections, supra.

Retroactive application of Rule 50 in this case ignores the long established doctrine favoring finality of litigation. Browder v. Director, Department of Corrections of Illinois, supra. Browder held that time limits prescribed in the civil rules are mandatory and jurisdictional noting:

[16] See also Boltes v. Entex, 158 F.R.D. 110, 112 (S.D. Tex. 1994). It is "well established" that in reviewing proper service, the court looks at the "version of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in effect at the time the complaint is filed." The same argument applies with equal force to this case. In both instances, the relevant conduct speaks to the power of the court to address the issues and the substantive rights of the parties to maintain or terminate an action.

> The purpose of the rule is clear: It is "to set a definite point of time when the litigation shall be at an end, unless within the time prescribed application has been made; and if it is not, to advise prospective appellees that they are freed of the appellant's demand. Any other construction of the statute would defeat its purpose.

Browder at 54 L.Ed.2d 531.

Browder further noted that only a timely filing of a post-trial motion would toll the applicable period in which to file an appeal. Id. at 533. Rule 50 and 59 motions are based in the interests of "speedy disposition and finality". Browder at 536.

This court has specifically recognized, in James B. Beam Distilling Co. v. Georgia, 501 U.S. 529, 115 L.Ed.2d 481, 111 S.Ct. 2439, reh. den., ___ (US) ___, 130 L.Ed.2d 1131, 115 S.Ct. 1179 (1991) that retroactive application of statutes in civil cases must be done with the principle of finality of judgments in mind:

> Of course, retroactivity in civil cases must be limited by the need for finality, see Chicot County Drainage Dist. v. Baxter State Bank, 308 U.S. 371, 84 L.Ed.2d 329, 60 S.Ct. 317 (1940); once suit is barred by res judicata or by statutes of limitation or repose, a new rule cannot reopen the door already closed.

James B. Beam Distilling v. Georgia, at 115 L.Ed.2d 492.

More recently, this court in Carlisle v. United States, 517 U.S. 416, 134 L.Ed.2d 613, 116 S.Ct. 1460 (1996), held as untimely, a motion for judgment of acquittal filed one day after the seven day period set forth in Fed.R.Crim.P.

29(a) and ruled as a result that the district court lacked jurisdiction to grant the motion.[17]

In this case, as in Carlisle, the plain, unambiguous directions of the rule were not complied with by the party seeking relief. In this case, as in Carlisle, the trial court loses jurisdiction absent a timely motion. In either event, the use of an amended rule to "vest" a court with jurisdiction outside the applicable timeliness is prohibited by the judicial doctrine favoring finality of judgments. In this case, Hopkins and others were deprived of their substantive right to a several million dollar judgment, by a trial court lacking jurisdiction based upon inappropriately and ill-preserved motions by G.E. Only the retroactive application of the 1995 version of Rule 50 by the Ninth Circuit makes this unjust result possible. This action is not only far from the usual course of judicial proceedings, but it has the effect of rewarding the dilatory conduct of the moving party, without justification, and further sanctions the failure of the trial court to exercise jurisdiction in accordance with established law.

This court should grant this petition and provide direction to the lower courts as to the proper rule to be applied when the retroactive application of a civil rule

[17] The Carlisle court, at 627, citing to United States v. Locke, 471 U.S. 84, 101, 85 L.Ed.2d 64, 105 S.Ct. 1785 (1985), noted the problems associated with application of a rule authorizing untimely filings of post-trial motions:

> "If one day late filings are acceptable, ten day late filings might be equally acceptable, and so on and the cascade of exceptions would engulf the rule erected by the filing deadline. . . . "

implicates the finality of judgment doctrine set forth above.

IV.

Retroactive application of amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) violates Hopkins' Fifth Amendment rights to Due Process, Seventh Amendment Right to Trial by Jury, and the statutory commands of the Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2072.

Retroactive application of amended Rule 50(b) violates Hopkins' substantive rights to due process under the Fifth Amendment. Once the trial court lost jurisdiction to rule on post-trial motions, and the period of time to appeal lapsed, Hopkins' judgment became final. A judgment, much like a property right, may not be vacated by retroactive legislation without violating due process rights.[18]

The doctrine of "vested rights" represents due process, and is grounded upon the recognition that "rights fixed by judgment are, in essence, a form of property over which the legislatures have no greater power than any other [property]." Georgia Association of Retarded Citizens v. McDaniel, 855 F.2d 805, 810 (11th Cir. 1988) (emphasis omitted), cert. den'd, 490 U.S. 1090, 109 S.Ct. 24, 31, 104

[18] As noted in Landgraf, supra at 253:

> The Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause prevents the Legislature (and other government actors) from depriving private persons of vested property rights . . . The Due Process Clause also protects the interests in fair notice and repose that may be compromised by retroactive legislation . . .

L.Ed.2d 988 (1989). In Hodges v. Snyder, 261 U.S. 600, 603, 43 S.Ct. 435, 436, 67 L.Ed. 819 (1923), this court noted:

> . . . the private rights of parties which have been vested by the judgment of a court cannot be taken away by subsequent legislation, but must be thereafter enforced by the court regardless of such legislation.

See also Pennsylvania v. Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Co., 59 U.S. 421, 437 (18 How.), 15 L.Ed. 435 (1852).

Further, in applying amended Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b), the Ninth Circuit violated the statutory dictates of The Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2072(b), which provides that while the Supreme Court may enact rules of procedure, any such rule "shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." Thus while amended Rule 50(b) may be valid on its face, its application in this case violates the Rules Enabling Act's specific prohibition against impairing the substantive rights of a party to a previously vested judgment which had become final at the conclusion of the case due to G.E.'s failure to timely serve and file post-trial motions and appeal. The retroactive application of amended Rule 50(b) also violates the spirit and mandate set forth in Fed.R.Civ.P. 1, requiring a "just, speedy, and inexpensive" determination of actions.

The Ninth Circuit, in retroactively applying amended Rule 50(b), seriously abridged and modified the substantive rights of Hopkins to judgment while enlarging the rights of G.E. by allowing it to avoid compliance with the law then in effect. This represents a departure by the Schudel court of the usual and accepted judicial procedure and warrants this Court's exercise of its supervisory power so as to insure that the lower courts comply with the dictates of 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2072 and the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

V.

The Trial court lacked jurisdiction pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) to grant JMOL in favor of G.E. and order a new trial and the Ninth Circuit erred in failing to ascertain whether the trial court properly ruled as a matter of law that G.E. was entitled to judgment.

The Ninth Circuit and trial court erred by failing to review other jurisdictional issues submitted, most notably the propriety of the trial court's grant of JMOL. Neither court applied the applicable standard of review or case law. Rather, the Schudel court merely ruled that since a new trial under Rule 50(b) was ordered, it lacked appellate jurisdiction. Failure of the Schudel court to ascertain the propriety of the trial court's Rule 50(b) order represents a departure from usual and accepted judicial procedure, justifying this court's exercise of its supervisory powers.

The Schudel court held that the trial court granted JMOL in G.E.'s favor as to certain "issues" in the Hopkins' claim. However, the Ninth Circuit failed to address, under the appropriate standard, de novo, whether the trial court properly granted JMOL and if so, whether the trial court acted properly in ordering a new trial. The Schudel opinion essentially holds that a trial court may grant JMOL on an "issue" such as one element of damages, and then, regardless of whether the "claim" remained viable, order a new trial. This reasoning is contrary to the express wording of Rule 50(a) (JMOL only appropriate if "claim" cannot be maintained without "issue" in dispute).

As each of the Hopkins' claims for negligence and loss of consortium were very much alive without the so-called "neurologic" injuries due to overwhelming proof of other respiratory and depressive injuries, the trial court lacked authority to grant "JMOL" and order a new trial.[19] The Schudel decision below fails to even address the propriety of such a ruling even though it is jurisdictional in nature.[20] Furthermore, neither the trial court nor the Schudel court applied the standard of review that holds JMOL is only appropriate when the evidence permits one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict after viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the Hopkins. Morgan v. Woessner, 997 F.2d 1244, 1252 (9th Cir. 1993). This failure is error requiring, at a minimum, that the lower courts be directed to review the propriety of their actions under the applicable standard.

[19] The new trial was granted pursuant to Rule 50(b) and not Rule 59.

[20] Venagas v. Wagner, 831 F.2d 1514, 1519 (9th Cir. 1977) directs that a new trial under Rule 50(b) may only be granted if the "verdict is against the great weight" of the evidence or "it is quite clear that the jury has reached a seriously erroneous result". The trial court failed to articulate any of the applicable standards set forth in Venagas v. Wagner, supra.

VI.

The trial court erred in granting JMOL under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) as G.E. failed to preserve issues under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(a).

Regardless of whether the motions for new trial and JMOL were timely served, the trial court lacked jurisdiction to entertain motions that were not previously raised in G.E.'s Rule 50(a) motion. Murphy v. City of Long Beach, 914 F.2d 183, 186 (9th Cir. 1990). Specifically, G.E. conceded that both Hopkins suffered from respiratory illness and Mrs. Hopkins suffered from depression. Nor did G.E. ever challenge the sufficiency of evidence as to Hopkins' loss of consortium claims. More importantly, G.E. failed to specifically address and raise in its Rule 50(a) motions any issues relative to any alleged "neurologic" claims advanced by the Hopkins. The failure of G.E. to challenge the sufficiency of evidence as to the Hopkins' claims in its Rule 50(a) motions deprives the trial court of jurisdiction to entertain Rule 50(b) on matters so omitted. Although this issue is jurisdictional, the Ninth Circuit did not address the propriety of the trial court's grant of JMOL on these issues and whether the claim could still be maintained under Rule 50(b). Lifshitz v. Walter Drake and Sons, Inc., 806 F.2d 1426 (9th Cir. 1986).

VII.

The trial court lacked jurisdiction to vacate the judgment based upon insufficient proof of damages for one injury (neurologic) when sufficient evidence existed of other injuries such as respiratory, depression and loss of consortium.

Fed.R.Civ.P. Rule 51 provides that exceptions to jury instructions must be taken before the case is submitted to the jury. See also Fed.R.Civ.P. 49(a) (failure to designate factual issue in special verdict waives issue after it goes to jury). G.E. did not challenge the instructions given, which asked the jury to determine damages but failed to specify sub-categories of injury such as neurologic and respiratory injuries. In fact, G.E. proposed an instruction nearly identical to that given by the Court. In so doing, G.E. waived its right to claim error in instructing the jury. As G.E. waived this right, it is wholly inappropriate for the trial court to sua sponte find that there was instructional error.[21] In this respect, as G.E. failed to preserve any issue relative to the jury instructions and/or move for a directed verdict for insufficient proof of damages on a particular injury, the trial court lacked jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 50(a) and 50(b) to grant JMOL on the so-called unproven issues, vacate the verdict and order a new trial. The Schudel decision below failed to address the lack of jurisdiction of the trial court to grant judgment

[21] The trial court's grant of JMOL and a new trial is based, in the Hopkins case, on the fact that it could not tell what portion of the damages were attributable to proven injuries (i.e. respiratory/depression) and which portion were attributable to the so-called unproven "neurologic" claim.

on this basis, regardless of the timeliness of filing or service of post-trial motions.

Jury verdicts are due considerable deference. Kern v. Levelor Lorentzen, Inc., 899 F.2d 772, 775 (9th Cir. 1990). Eastman Kodak Company v. Southern Photo Materials Company, 273 U.S. 359, 71 L.Ed. 684, 47 S.Ct. 400 (1927) (issue of damages having been submitted to the jury, "its determination as to this matter is conclusive"). This line of case law is consistent with a logical interpretation of Rule 50(b), which requires the court to review whether the "claim" (in this case negligence) remains despite absence of proof on an issue. The trial court's reasoning, that a "reasonable" juror must have found Hopkins presented a neurologic claim, failed to recognize that jurors are presumed to follow instructions and would not award damages for injuries unsupported by the evidence. Nor did the trial court recognize its limitations in thereafter dissecting a verdict.[22]

In this case, G.E. had a right and responsibility to request the jury be instructed relative to particular injuries. G.E. waived this right. The trial court is thus precluded from segregating damages by injury and ordering a new trial based upon G.E.'s failure to request appropriate instructions.

[22] Washington law provides that failure of a jury to attribute damages to particular injuries, absent request by the defendant, prohibits a trial court from thereafter attempting to dissect the jury's verdict. Wheeler v. Catholic Archdiocese of Seattle, 124 Wn.2d 634, 880 P.2d 29 (Wn. 1994). See also McCord v. Maguire, 873 F.2d 1271, amended, 885 F.2d 650 (9th Cir. 1989).

CONCLUSION

The Ninth Circuit opinion, Schudel et al. v. General Electric, supra has decided issues that this Court should decide, namely the retroactive application of an amended civil rule (Rule 50(b)) to a case that had already been completed. Further, the Schudel court's opinion is in conflict with decisions of this court and other circuits relative to the proper default rule of retroactivity. The Ninth Circuit Schudel court, much like the Ninth Circuit in the Hughes Aircraft, supra, ruled that an amended rule of procedure applies retroactively. Along with these important federal questions, this court should exercise its supervisory authority to insure that the lower courts did not exceed their authority under the then existing rules and case law. For reasons set forth above, Petitioners respectfully request that this Court grant their Petition for a Writ of Certiorari.

Respectfully submitted this 20th day of February, 1998.

THOMAS C. PHELAN
Attorney for Petitioners

Before BROWNING, D.W. NELSON, and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges.

JAMES R. BROWNING, Circuit Judge:

This diversity case involves claims for damages from negligence and loss of consortium against defendants General Electric Company and Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corporation. Kaiser contracted with General Electric to clean up polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) at Kaiser's Trentwood facility in Spokane, Washington. Nine of the ten plaintiffs were employed by General Electric on the cleanup.[1] These plaintiffs alleged they developed various neurological and respiratory problems from exposure to two cleaning solvents, trichloroethane (TCA) and perchloroethylene (Perc).

---

A jury returned verdicts for the plaintiffs. The defendants moved for JNOV or new trial. The district court affirmed the verdict in favor of one plaintiff, Deborah Williams. The court granted JNOV with respect to respiratory injuries[2] asserted by Merlin Carlson ("Carlson") and with respect to neurological injuries[3] asserted by Kathrene Froese, John Hopkins, and Ruth Hopkins ("the Froese plaintiffs"). The court ordered a new trial with respect to injuries of Carlson and the Froese plaintiffs as to which JNOV had not been granted. Finally, the court granted JNOV on all claims asserted by the five remaining plaintiffs ("the Schudel plaintiffs"[4]).

Defendants appeal the verdict in favor of plaintiff Williams. The other plaintiffs appeal the granting of motions for JNOV or new trial. We address four issues: (1) whether the district court had jurisdiction over the defendants' motions for JNOV or new trial; (2) whether we have jurisdiction to review the district court's order for JNOV and new trial as to Carlson and the Froese plaintiffs; (3) whether the district court erred by granting

[2] With respect to Carlson, the term "respiratory injuries" applies to respiratory injuries, fatigue, overall body pain, and all other alleged injuries that do not fall within the term "neurological injuries."

[3] With respect to these plaintiffs, the term "neurological injuries" applies to neurological injuries, headaches, rashes, and all other alleged injuries that do not fall within the term "respiratory injuries."

JNOV against the Schudel plaintiffs without considering expert testimony the court concluded after trial had been erroneously admitted; and (4) whether the district court properly admitted expert testimony on behalf of plaintiff Williams.

I. District Court Jurisdiction Over the Defendants' Motions for JNOV or New Trial

Plaintiffs argue the district court lacked jurisdiction to consider defendants' motions for JNOV or new trial because the motions were not properly served.[5] When the motions were filed, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 50 and 59 required the defendants to both file and serve such motions within ten days after entry of judgment.[6] Defendants filed the motions and delivered them to Federal Express for service on the tenth day after judgment. While personal delivery or delivery to the U.S. Postal Service would have satisfied the service requirement, delivery to Federal Express did not. Magnuson v. Video Yesteryear, 85 F.3d 1424, 1431 (9th Cir.1996).

Rules 50 and 59 were amended in 1995, however, to require only that such motions be filed, not served, no later than 10 days after entry of judgment. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b), 59(b). The amendments took effect

[5] Plaintiff Carlson does not raise this issue; his attorney was timely served.

[6] See former Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b) ("Such a motion [for judgment as a matter of law] may be renewed by service and filing not later than 10 days after entry of judgment."); former Fed.R.Civ.P. 59(b) ("A motion for a new trial shall be served not later than 10 days after the entry of judgment.").

December 1, 1995, and "govern all proceedings in civil cases thereafter commenced and, insofar as just and practicable, all proceedings in civil cases then pending." S.Ct. Order, Amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (Apr. 27, 1995).

This proceeding was pending on December 1, 1995, and no prejudice will result from application of the amendments. All parties have briefed the substantive, non-jurisdictional arguments in detail. No additional action on the part of the court or the parties is required to proceed. We have applied amended federal rules of appellate procedure retroactively in similar circumstances, see Schroeder v. McDonald, 55 F.3d 454, 459-60 (9th Cir.1995); Wallis v. J.R. Simplot Co., 26 F.3d 885, 888 (9th Cir.1994), and do so here.

II. Appellate Jurisdiction Over Order Granting JNOV and New Trial to Carlson and the Froese Plaintiffs

The district court granted JNOV with respect to respiratory injuries allegedly sustained by Carlson and with respect to neurological injuries allegedly sustained by the Froese plaintiffs. The court vacated the verdicts for these plaintiffs on the ground that they were "tainted" by the evidence of the injuries as to which JNOV had been granted, and ordered a new trial as to Carlson's neurological injuries and the Froese plaintiffs' respiratory injuries. The court certified appeals from the orders for new trial pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(b).[7]

[7] Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(b), when a lawsuit involves multiple claims or multiple parties, a district court "may direct

We have jurisdiction to review final judgments on entire claims, not on individual issues. An order adjudicating only one issue that is not determinative of an entire claim is not appealable even if a district court certifies the order under Rule 54(b). Arizona State Carpenters Pension Trust Fund v. Miller, 938 F.2d 1038, 1039 (9th Cir.1991). We must determine independently whether a certified judgment is final as to a particular claim.[8] Id.

Litigants who advance a single legal theory of liability applied to one set of facts allege a single claim. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wetzel, 424 U.S. 737, 743, 96 S.Ct. 1202, 1206, 47 L.Ed.2d 435 (1976). Carlson and Froese alleged a single claim of negligence, not separate claims for neurological injury and respiratory injury. Similarly, the Hopkinses alleged claims for negligence and loss of consortium, not separate claims for neurological injury and respiratory injury as to each claim.

The district court granted JNOV as to issues related to certain injuries allegedly suffered by plaintiffs because of defendants' negligence. We have no jurisdiction to the entry of a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties only upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for the entry of judgment."

[8] Carlson and the Froese plaintiffs argue the standard of review is not de novo, but abuse of discretion. We review the certification of an appeal under Rule 54(b) for abuse of discretion. Texaco, Inc. v. Ponsoldt, 939 F.2d 794, 797 (9th Cir.1991). Even though a decision is certified under Rule 54(b), however, we must independently ensure that we are dealing with a final judgment before exercising jurisdiction. Arizona State Carpenters, 938 F.2d at 1039.

review the court's rulings on these issues because the claims for negligence and the derivative claims for loss of consortium have not been finally determined. The order granting new trial is also interlocutory and not immediately appealable. Allied Chem. Corp. v. Daiflon, Inc., 449 U.S. 33, 34, 101 S.Ct. 188, 189-90, 66 L.Ed.2d 193 (1980); Roy v. Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft, 781 F.2d 670, 671 (9th Cir.1985).[9]

III. Excising Testimony in Granting JNOV

The Schudel plaintiffs argue the district court erred in excising the previously admitted testimony of Dr. Paula Lantsberger before granting defendants' motion for JNOV. We agree.

Dr. Lantsberger was the only witness on causation on behalf of the Schudel plaintiffs. Dr. Lantsberger described symptoms and offered specific testimony regarding causation under two theories: a specific condition causation theory; and a "whole person aggravation" theory. The defendants filed a motion to exclude Dr. Lantsberger's causation testimony prior to trial and a motion to strike

[9] Carlson and the Froese plaintiffs argue this court has jurisdiction to review a conditional grant of a new trial under Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(c). See Air-Sea Forwarders, Inc. v. Air Asia Co., 880 F.2d 176, 190 n. 15 (9th Cir.1989) (stating that appellate courts may review conditional new trial orders because the plain language of Rule 50(c)(1) expressly permits this review). The district court ordered a new trial under Rule 50(b), not Rule 50(c)(1). The order was not conditioned on reversal of the order granting JNOV. Rule 50(b) does not provide for review of non-conditional new trial orders.

the testimony during trial. The district court did not rule on these motions.

After the jury returned verdicts in favor of plaintiffs and defendants moved for JNOV, the court held that Dr. Lantsberger's causation testimony based on the "whole body aggravation" theory had been admitted erroneously. The court then considered the sufficiency of the remaining evidence to support the jury verdicts and granted the motion for JNOV. The court denied defendants' alternative request for a new trial.

Four circuits have held that, when deciding a motion for JNOV, a trial court may not ignore evidence erroneously admitted at trial, reasoning that excluding evidence after the verdict is unfair to a party who may have relied on the determination that the evidence was admissible.[10] "If evidence is ruled inadmissible during the course of the trial, the plaintiff has the opportunity to introduce new evidence. However, when that evidence is ruled inadmissible in the context of deciding a motion for JNOV, the plaintiff, having relied on the evidence already introduced, is unable to remedy the situation." Jackson v. Pleasant Grove Health Care Ctr., 980 F.2d 692, 696 (11th Cir.1993).

The Third Circuit has held that such exclusion is proper as long as other evidence relating to the same issue was not barred during trial as cumulative, reasoning that the moving party has a competing interest in litigating a case only once and expressing doubt that litigants would hold back significant evidence at trial. Lightning Lube, Inc. v. Witco Corp., 4 F.3d 1153, 1199-1200 (3d Cir.1993).

We recently indicated we would abide by the same rule. See Central Office Tel., Inc. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 108 F.3d 981, 993 (9th Cir.1997). We now hold that when ruling on a Rule 50(b) motion, a district court should not exclude evidence erroneously admitted at trial. The record should be taken as it existed when the trial closed. This rule promotes certainty: litigants need not supplement conditionally admitted evidence, perhaps unnecessarily; and district courts need not speculate as to what other evidence might have been offered if the evidence had been excluded at trial. The rule promotes fairness: punishing a litigant for the court's erroneous admission of evidence is unfair; and the remedy of a new trial is available to put both sides on an equal footing. Jackson, 980 F.2d at 696 n. 4.

The district court properly concluded that Dr. Lantsberger's testimony based on the "whole person aggravation" theory of causation did not meet the standard of Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469 (1993) (Daubert I), (outlined in Part IV of this opinion), and should have been excluded. Once the jury rendered its verdict based on the improperly admitted evidence, however, the district court erred in excising that evidence when ruling on the motion for JNOV. Considering all the evidence admitted at trial, including Dr. Lantsberger's "whole person aggravation" theory testimony, we conclude there was sufficient evidence to support the jury verdicts in favor of the Schudel plaintiffs.

Nonetheless, these verdicts may not stand. The district court erred in denying defendants' motion for new trial. A new trial should be granted when the erroneous admission of evidence affected the substantial rights of the parties. Fed.R.Civ.P. 61. Dr. Lantsberger's testimony was the only evidence of causation; its erroneous admission was undoubtedly prejudicial.

IV. The Defendants' Appeal

Defendants argue the neurological symptom causation testimony of Dr. William Morton, Dr. Daniel Goldstein, and Dr. Lantsberger underlying the jury verdict for Deborah Williams was not admissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 702.[11]

A.

The Supreme Court held in Daubert I, 509 U.S. at 590-91, 113 S.Ct. at 2795-96, that Rule 702 requires the trial judge to determine that proposed scientific expert testimony will be both reliable and relevant. See also Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharm., 43 F.3d 1311, 1313 (9th Cir.1995) (Daubert II).

Scientific knowledge is reliable if it is "ground[ed] in the methods and procedures of science" and "connotes more than subjective belief or unsupported speculation."

[11] Defendants also argue the trial court should have held a pretrial hearing on the admissibility of the testimony of Williams' experts. Because we conclude the expert testimony should have been excluded, we do not decide whether a pretrial hearing should have been held.

Daubert I, 509 U.S. at 590, 113 S.Ct. at 2795. In determining reliability, "[t]he focus . . . must be solely on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that they generate." Id. at 595, 113 S.Ct. at 2797.

Evidence of scientific knowledge is relevant if the "reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue." Id. at 593, 113 S.Ct. at 2796; see also Daubert II, 43 F.3d at 1315 (evidence of scientific knowledge must "logically advance[ ] a material aspect of the proposing party's case"). A court's determination of relevance must consider the applicable substantive standard. See id. at 1320. Under Washington tort law, a plaintiff must show that the "the act complained of 'probably' or 'more likely than not' caused the subsequent disability." O'Donoghue v. Riggs, 73 Wash.2d 814, 440 P.2d 823, 830 (1968). This is virtually the same as the standard under California tort law applied in Daubert II. See 43 F.3d at 1320. Under this standard, we held in Daubert II that expert testimony offered to prove causation did not satisfy the relevance requirement because the evidence suggested only that use of the drug at issue "could possibly have caused plaintiffs' injuries," rather than "more likely than not" caused the injuries, i.e., that use of the drug more than doubled the likelihood the injuries would occur. 43 F.3d at 1320-22.

B.

The district court approved reliance by Williams' experts on interview data collected by Diane Nebel.

Nebel contacted many of the workers at the Kaiser facility after one of the project supervisors fell ill with Legionnaire's disease. Nebel found no evidence of a Legionnaire's outbreak, but did discover that some of the workers, including the plaintiffs, suffered from various medical symptoms. The data collected in Nebel's Legionnaire's disease investigation provided the basis for much of the scientific testimony presented by Williams' experts at trial.

The district court acted within its discretion in approving the use of this data by Williams' expert witnesses. Dr. Goldstein and Dr. Lantsberger both testified the data was of the type toxicologists consider reliable and regularly rely upon. See Fed.R.Evid. 703.

Dr. Morton testified that plaintiff Williams suffered from solvent-induced toxic encephalopathy which "more probably than not" was caused by exposure to Perc and TCA. Dr. Morton's testimony met Daubert's relevance requirement. However, it did not meet Daubert 's requirement of reliability.

Dr. Morton's conclusions were based on extrapolation from studies that: (1) involved organic solvents other than TCA or Perc; and (2) examined long-term exposure at relatively low chemical concentrations or short-term exposure at very high concentrations, rather than the short-term, moderate-level exposure sustained by Williams. Dr. Morton did not establish it was scientifically acceptable to draw general conclusions about the neurotoxicity of TCA and Perc from studies of other chemicals; indeed, the testimony indicated small differences in molecular structure often have significant consequences.

As to differences in length and intensity of exposure, the district court erroneously reasoned that because there was evidence that acute exposure to TCA and Perc can cause toxic encephalopathy, whether Williams' exposure was sufficient to cause her symptoms was a question for the jury. Williams' exposure was neither long enough nor intense enough to fall within the ranges described in the studies Dr. Morton relied upon. Extrapolation was necessary to make the studies relevant, and there was no showing that the necessary extrapolation was scientifically acceptable.[12]

Dr. Goldstein's testimony suffered from similar deficiencies. Dr. Goldstein conceded that only five organic solvents, none of which were involved in this case, had been proven to be neurotoxic. He also testified that it would be improper to infer conclusions as to the toxicity of TCA and Perc based on the toxicity of other solvents, and that repeated exposure to nonpersistent toxins such as organic solvents over a long period must be documented to establish a causal relationship.

Dr. Goldstein acknowledged that the biochemical mechanism of neurotoxicity from TCA and Perc has not been demonstrated. Only two studies cited by Dr. Goldstein involved TCA and Perc, and neither met Daubert standards. The Altman study found no relationship between exposure to Perc and the toxic encephalopathy or loss of consciousness alleged by the plaintiffs. The [12] Given our analysis of the admissibility of Dr. Morton's testimony, we need not consider defendants' contention that his testimony should have been excluded because testimony based on case reports is not admissible under Daubert.

Kalifant study involved long-term (7-15 years), repetitive exposures to TCA at high levels.

Dr. Lantsberger's testimony failed to meet Daubert 's relevance requirement. She testified it was only a "possibility," not a "probability," that Williams suffered organic brain damage from exposure to solvents at the facility. Dr. Lantsberger admitted she could not testify to a specific cause and effect relationship between Williams' exposure and health problems. She relied instead on a "whole person aggravation" theory without establishing that the theory had a scientific basis.

Dr. Lantsberger's testimony regarding the hazards of TCA and Perc was inadmissible under Daubert. Dr. Lantsberger, like Dr. Goldstein, relied on the Altman and Kalifant articles to reach her neurotoxicity conclusions, and like Dr. Goldstein, admitted that medical science has not determined the effects of short-term exposure to the solvents involved.

Plaintiff Williams points to other expert witnesses whose testimony was not challenged by defendants. Only one of these experts provided causation testimony, and his testimony related only to Williams' respiratory injury.

Considering all the evidence admitted at trial, including the erroneously admitted evidence, we hold the district court properly denied defendants' motion for JNOV with respect to Williams. Admission of the challenged expert testimony was prejudicial, however, because it was the sole causation evidence with respect to Williams' neurological symptoms. Accordingly, we vacate the judgment entered on the jury verdict, reverse the district court's denial of defendants' motion for a new trial, and remand.

CONCLUSION

We lack jurisdiction to review the district court's grant of JNOV and new trial as to plaintiffs Merlin Carlson, Kathrene Froese, John Hopkins, and Ruth Hopkins, and DISMISS their appeals.

We REVERSE the grant of JNOV and the denial of the motions for new trial as to plaintiffs David Schudel, Tim Schudel, Sandra Schudel, Daniel Glass, and Craig Thompson, and REMAND.

We find plaintiff Deborah Williams' neurological expert testimony on causation inadmissible, VACATE the judgment entered on the jury verdict in her favor, REVERSE the denial of the motion for new trial, and REMAND.

DISMISSED in part, and VACATED, REVERSED, and REMANDED in part. No costs allowed.

(Filed Nov. 24, 1997)

Before: BROWNING, D.W. NELSON, and FERNANDEZ, Circuit Judges

The petition for rehearing of Merlin E. Carlson, Jr. is DENIED.

The panel has voted to DENY the petition for rehearing of David Schudel, Timothy Schudel, Sandra Schudel, Daniel Glass, Craig Thompson, Deborah Williams, and Kathrene Froese. Judge Browning and Judge Fernandez have voted to deny the suggestion for rehearing en banc, and Judge Nelson so recommends.

The panel has voted to DENY the petition for rehearing of John Hopkins and Ruth Hopkins. Judge Browning and Judge Fernandez have voted to deny the suggestion for rehearing en banc, and Judge Nelson so recommends.

The full court has been advised of the suggestions for rehearing en banc, and no judge of the court has requested a vote on the suggestions for rehearing en banc. Fed. R. App. P. 35(b).

The petitions for rehearing are DENIED and the suggestions for rehearing en banc are REJECTED.

APPENDIX C

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

EASTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

DAVID SCHUDEL, et al, et ux, Plaintiffs, vs. GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY and KAISER ALUMINUM AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, Defendants.	No. CS-92-081-FVS ORDER RE POST-TRIAL MOTIONS (Filed Nov. 25, 1994)

BEFORE THE COURT are certain post-trial motions. They were decided without oral argument on November 22, 1994. See Local Rule ("LR") 7(h)(3).

I. PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO STRIKE

A. Background

Judgment was entered on July 13, 1994. On July 27, 1994, the defendants filed motions for both judgments as a matter of law and a new trial. Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b); Fed.R.Civ.P. 59. That same day, copies of the motions were mailed to opposing counsel via Federal Express.

The plaintiffs now move the Court to strike the defendants' Rule 50(b) and Rule 59 motions. They argue that the motions were not served in a timely manner.

B. Ruling

Motions for judgment as a matter of law and for a new trial must be filed and served within ten days of the date judgment is entered. Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b); Fed.R.Civ.P. 59(b). In calculating the ten-day deadline, neither intermediate weekends nor legal holidays are counted. Fed.R.Civ.P. 6(b). Thus, the defendants had until the twenty-seventh of July to file and serve their Rule 50(b) and Rule 59 motions.

It is undisputed that the defendants mailed copies of their motions to all opposing parties by Federal Express on July 27, 1994. Since "[s]ervice by mail is complete upon mailing," Fed.R.Civ.P. 5(b), the defendants' motions would appear to have been both filed and served prior to the deadline.

The plaintiffs disagree. They contend that sending documents by Federal Express does not constitute "mailing" within the meaning of Rule 5(b).

Notwithstanding the plaintiffs' disagreement, they have failed to cite a single decision adopting their interpretation of Rule 5(b). They are forced to rely upon Transco Leasing Corp. v. United States, 992 F.2d 552, 554 n.2 (5th Cir. 1993), a case in which the Fifth Circuit cautioned, in dicta, "that service by Federal Express may not be service by mail."[1]

[1] Professors Wright and Miller mention Transco, but do not analyze the issue. 4A C. Wright, A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1148 (2d ed. Supp. 1994).

The defendants, by contrast, have cited two district courts decisions that considered – and rejected – the plaintiffs' position. Both held that Rule 5(b) does not require mailing through the United States Postal Service. United States v. Certain Real Property & Premises Known As 63-29 Trimble Rd., 812 F.Supp. 332, 334 (E.D.N.Y. 1992); Edmond v. United States Postal Serv., 727 F.Supp. 7, 11 (D.D.C. 1989), rev'd on other grounds, 949 F.2d 415 (1991).

Here, it was reasonable for the defendants to believe that the method of service they utilized would be more prompt than ordinary first class mail, and every bit as reliable. Given the plaintiffs' failure to cite authority supporting their interpretation of Rule 5(b), and the fact that two district courts have specifically rejected their position, the plaintiffs' motion to strike will be denied.

II. DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW.

The defendants offer six reasons why the Court should grant judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b). They are as follows: (1) the plaintiffs' experts based their opinions upon unreliable data; (2) certain experts were not qualified, and their opinions do not constitute "scientific knowledge" within the meaning of Rule 702; (3) even if the disputed opinions are admissible, they fail to establish causation; (4) under Washington law, many of Dr. Lantsberger's opinions regarding causation are legally insufficient; (5) the plaintiffs were loaned servants; and (6) Kaiser owed no duty of care to the plaintiffs.

A. Reliability/Loaned Servant/Duty

Not all of the defendants' arguments require in-depth analysis. The first, fifth, and sixth may be disposed of rather quickly.

1. Reliability of Data

The Court refused to admit the "Nebel" exhibits because they were hearsay, and the plaintiffs had not demonstrated the applicability of an exception to the hearsay rule. Moreover, even if an exception had applied, the exhibits were cumulative. (Tr. at 5790-91).

Later, the defendants attempted to impeach Craig Thompson with statements he made to Ms. Nebel. See Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2)(A) (admission by party-opponent). The plaintiffs objected. (Tr. at 5970.) In sustaining the objection, the Court said, in part, "They [the Nebel exhibits] were not admitted because of concerns about reliability." (Tr. at 5984.)

The defendants have interpreted the court's statement as a finding that the Nebel exhibits were unreliable. When both sections of the transcript are read in context, it is evident that no such finding was intended.

2. Loaned Servant

The jury was instructed properly on the question of "loaned servant." Since there is substantial evidence to support the jury's determination that the plaintiffs were not loaned servants, there is no basis for granting the defendants judgment on this issue.

3. Duty of Care

With Respect to the question of "duty," the defendants have cited no new authority. The Court is satisfied that a duty existed.

B. Admissibility of Certain Expert Opinions

The second argument focuses on the admissibility of opinions given by Drs. Lantsberger, Goldstein, and Morton. The defendants submit that these three witnesses were not qualified to render opinions regarding toxic encephalopathy, and that their theories of organic brain damage are not supported by the scientific literature.

Both prongs of the second argument were raised prior to (and during) trial. After reviewing the materials presented by the parties, the Court ruled against the defendants on both issues.

Since then, the Ninth Circuit has decided two civil cases, the outcome in each hinging on the admissibility of expert testimony. Both opinions discuss the requirements of Rule 702 in light of Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., ___ U.S. ___, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469 (1993). Both agree that expert testimony may not be admitted unless the trial judge first determines that the expert's conclusions are based upon scientific knowledge. Hopkins v. Dow Corning Corp., 33 F.3d 1116, 1124 (9th Cir. 1994); Claar v. Burlington Northern R. Co., 29 F.3d 499, 502 (9th Cir. 1994).

Although Hopkins and Claar are clearly relevant here, neither dictates a result different than that previously reached by the Court. As a result, the Court declines to disturb its prior rulings regarding toxic encephalopathy.

C. Sufficiency of Certain Expert Opinions (Background)

The third and fourth arguments challenge the sufficiency of certain expert opinions – primarily those of Dr. Lantsberger. Because this part of the defendants' Rule 50(b) motion attacks sufficiency, it is necessary to describe the disputed opinions in some detail.

1. Dan Glass

Mr. Glass reported a number of symptoms to Dr. Paula Lantsberger, including heart palpitations, headaches, memory loss, and respiratory problems. Dr. Lantsberger was the only expert who attempted to link any of Glass' specific symptoms to work at Kaiser.

* * *

probable than not basis, I think that her conditions as we have outlined them have been aggravated by her exposure at, by her work at the Kaiser plant." (Tr. at 3145.)

8. Ruth Hopkins/John Hopkins

The defendants concede that the Hopkins' principal claims involved respiratory injuries. The defendants argue, however, that the Hopkins also maintained a claim for brain damage. The record reflects the following concerning the defendants' contention:

During direct examination, Dr. Samuel Milham was asked by counsel for the Hopkins to read the conclusion of a study to the jury. Milham relied, in part, "[T]he severe neurologic injuries suffered by the workers in the incident are sobering reminders that easily preventable organic solvent related occupational illness continues to occur in a highly developed country in the late 20th century." (Tr. at 1436.) (Emphasis added.)

In addition, the Hopkins' attorney participated actively in the cross-examination of Dr. Neil Rosenberg, the defendant's expert on the subject of solvent-induced organic brain damage. (Tr. at 9473-89, 9529-40.) He questioned Rosenberg about neurologic injury in general, (see, e.g., Tr. at 9481-82), and Mrs. Hopkins' case in particular – including magnetic resonance imaging ("MRI".) (Tr. at 9538-39.) He also had Rosenberg confirm that his testimony had nothing to do with the "pulmonary aspect of this case." (Tr. at 9540.)

During closing, the Hopkins' attorney devoted most of his time to pulmonary complaints. He did not restrict himself to that subject, however. For example, he asked the jury to think about Ruth Hopkins' "memory problems." (Tr. at 12022.) Later, he said, "These chemicals can hurt you. They can hurt your organs. They can hurt your brains." (Tr. at 12028.)

It was at this point that he asked the jury to discount Dr. Rosenberg's testimony about magnetic resonance imaging and Toluene abusers. In essence, he argued that his clients' exposure to organic solvents was distinguishable from that of the Toluene abusers Dr. Rosenberg had described, thereby implying that it was of no significance that Mrs. Hopkins's MRI was normal. (Tr. at 12028-29.)

D. Sufficiency of Certain Expert Opinions (Analysis)

A motion for judgment as a matter of law may be granted when "a party has been fully heard with respect to an issue and there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to have found for that party with respect to that issue. . . . " Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(a)(1). See Montiel v. City of Los Angeles, 2 F.3d 335, 342 (9th Cir.1993). The moving party must demonstrate that insofar as the verdict is concerned, the evidence permits but one reasonable conclusion. Conner v. Sakai, 15 F.3d 1463, 1467 (9th Cir.1993).

and "overall body pain."

With respect to respiratory complaints, Dr. Lantsberger was forced to concede that Mr. Carlson does not have Reactive Airways Dysfunction Syndrome or industrially induced asthma. Similarly, with respect to "bone pain and joint aches," she could only say, "I don't know what caused these guys to have the aches and pains, but I do know that a significant number of the workers did have them." Given the record, a reasonable jury could not have found for Mr. Carlson on his non-neurological claims.

7. Deborah Williams

Ms. Williams presented claims for organic brain damage and respiratory injury. A number of experts testified on her behalf. Although Dr. Lantsberger opined that Ms.

Williams' "conditions" were aggravated by work at Kaiser, it is questionable whether her testimony would have had appreciable impact on the jury's verdict.

8. Ruth Hopkins/John Hopkins

Based upon the evidence presented by the Hopkins, their cross-examination of Dr. Rosenberg, and the manner in which they argued their case, a reasonable jury would have assumed the Hopkins were making a claim for brain damage. Granted, the jury may not have viewed it as the Hopkins' principal claim, but the jury would have understood that it was a very real part of the Hopkins' case. Therein lies the problem. Having chosen to make a claim for solvent-induced brain damage, the Hopkins were obligated to prove it. They failed to do so. A reasonable jury could not have found that the Hopkins suffered neurologic injuries as a proximate cause of the defendants' negligence. The defendants are therefore entitled to judgment as a matter of law on that particular claim.

E. Sufficiency of Certain Expert Opinions (Conclusion)

In view of the foregoing, the defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on a number of claims. They include the following: all claims asserted by Dan Glass, David Schduel, Craig Thompson and Tim Schudel; all non-respiratory claims asserted by Kathrene Froese; all non-neurological claims asserted by Merlin Carlson; and all non-respiratory claims asserted by the Hopkins.

Although several claims must be dismissed, several remain. The next question is whether a new trial is necessary.

Approximately six weeks prior to trial, the Court asked the plaintiffs to list their claims against the defendants. (Order Re Daubert Procedure (Ct. Rec. 326) at 7.) The plaintiffs declined to do so. (Plaintiffs' Lists of Claims (Ct. Rec. 334).) Instead, they presented the jury with a long list of symptoms, only some of which could be connected to the plaintiffs' work at Kaiser on a more probable than not basis. Furthermore, when it came time to instruct the jury, the plaintiffs rejected a suggestion that the jurors be asked to

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

EASTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

DAVID SCHUDEL, et al., et ux., Plaintiffs, vs. GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY and KAISER ALUMINUM AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, Defendants.	No. CS-92-081-FVS ORDER RE MOTIONS TO AMEND AND CERTIFY (Filed Jan. 17, 1995)

BEFORE THE COURT are motions to amend Order Re Post-Trial Motions,[1] and to authorize appeals from it. All motions were heard without oral argument on January 13, 1995.

CLAIM OF SANDRA SCHUDEL

Relief Requested

Mr. Timothy Schudel alleged that he suffered various injuries while working on the Kaiser cleanup project. His wife, Sandra Schudel, brought separate claims for loss of consortium based upon the injuries her husband allegedly suffered. Mrs. Schudel's loss-of-consortium claims were not addressed in the Order Re Post-Trial Motions. Now that Timothy Schudel's claims have been dismissed with prejudice, the defendants move the Court to dismiss Sandra Schudel's loss-of-consortium claims.

Ruling

The defendant's motion to amend (Ct. Rec. 574) is granted. Ms. Sandra Schudel's claims against the defendants will be dismissed with prejudice.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

Relief Requested

After the jury returned its verdicts, the defendants moved for a new trial (Ct. Rec. 486). Except in the case of Deborah Williams, the Court did not address the merits of the defendants' motion. (In her case, the defendant's motion was denied.) The defendants now move the Court, pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(c)(1), to issue a conditional ruling with respect to the other plaintiffs.

Ruling

The defendant's motion for new trial will be denied with respect to all plaintiffs.

HOPKINS' MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Relief Requested

Plaintiffs Ruth Hopkins and John Hopkins move the Court to reconsider its decision vacating the verdicts in their favor and ordering a new trial. If the Court declines to do so, Ruth Hopkins moves the Court to clarify its order regarding her claims. She notes that the Order Re Post-Trial Motions dismisses all non-respiratory claims. She wants to know whether the Court intended to preclude her from recovering for depression (allegedly) spawned by her respiratory problems.

Ruling

The Hopkins' motion for reconsideration (Ct. Rec. 580) is denied except with respect to Ruth Hopkins's request for clarification of the Court's ruling regarding recovery of damages for depression. If, upon retrial, Ruth Hopkins proves that she suffered depression as a result of respiratory problems caused by the defendants, she may recover damages for her depression.

RULE 54(b)

Relief Requested

Both sides move the Court to authorize appeals of the judgments adjudicating the claims of Deborah Williams, Dan Glass, David Schudel, Craig Thompson, Tim Schudel, and Sandra Schudel. Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(b) (1994).[2] In addition, plaintiffs Kathrene Froese, Merlin Carlson,

---

[2] Rule 54(b) states, in pertinent part, "When more than one claim for relief is presented in an action, . . . , or when multiple parties are involved, the court may direct the entry of a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties only upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for the entry of judgment."

Ruth Hopkins, and John Hopkins move the Court to permit them to appeal the order granting a new trial.

Analysis

Under Rule 54(b), the Court must first determine whether a final judgment exists. Curtiss-Wright Corp. v. General Elec. Co., 446 U.S. 1, 7, 100 S.Ct. 1460, 1464, 64 L.Ed.2d 1 (1980). Once that task has been completed, the Court must decide whether there is any just reason to delay the appellate process. Id. at 8, 100 S.Ct. at 1465. In doing so, the Court must consider both the administrative impact of releasing claims for appeal, and "the equities involved." Id. at 8, 100 S.Ct. at 1465.

1. Existence of final judgments

The claims of ten plaintiffs are at issue in this action. Now that the Court has entered its Order Re Post-Trial Motions, the claims of Deborah Williams, Dan Glass, David Schudel, Craig Thompson, Tim Schudel, and Sandra Schudel have been fully adjudicated. What of the claims of Kathrene Froese, Merlin Carlson, Ruth Hopkins, and John Hopkins?

In its order, the Court ruled that these four plaintiffs (i.e., Kathrene Froese, Merlin Carlson, Ruth Hopkins, and John Hopkins) could not recover damages for certain (alleged) injuries. The judgments which had been entered in their favor were vacated, and a new trial was ordered. In other words, the order limited damages, but left their negligence claims otherwise unresolved pending a new trial. As a result, insofar as Kathrene Froese, Merlin Carlson, Ruth Hopkins, and John Hopkins are concerned, the order is not a final judgment. See Arizona State Carpenters Pension Trust Fund v. Miller, 938 F.2d 1038, 1040 (9th Cir.1991) (holding that an order dismissing a claim for punitive damages was not final).

2. No just reason for delay

(a) Dan Glass, David Schudel, Craig Thompson, Tim Schudel, and Sandra Schudel

The record is now complete with respect to these five claims. Nothing that might occur in district court will affect appellate review of these dismissals. It is now up to the Court of Appeals to determine whether each dismissal was proper. In doing so, the Court of Appeals will have to review each claim separately. Consequently, authorizing these five plaintiffs to appeal will not result in unwarranted duplication of appellate effort.

(b) Deborah Williams

The verdict in favor of Ms. Williams was upheld. Appellate review of that verdict will facilitate adjudication of those claims which must be retried.

3. The four remaining claims

The Court ordered a new trial with respect to the claims of Kathrene Froese, Merlin Carlson, Ruth Hopkins, and John Hopkins. An order granting a new trial is interlocutory. As a general rule, it is not appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. Roy v. Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft, 781 F.2d 670, 671 (9th Cir.1985); Eaton v. National Steel Products Company, 624 F.2d 863, 864 (9th Cir.1980). There is an exception to that rule, however. An order granting a new trial may be appealed if the district court no longer had jurisdiction to do so. See Eaton, 624 F.2d at 864.

Here, the plaintiffs moved to strike the defendants' post-trial motions, arguing that they were untimely. The Court denied the plaintiffs' motion, and granted post-trial relief. Should the Court of Appeals disagree with this Court's assessment of the timeliness of the defendants' post-trial motions, the Court of Appeals will have to determine whether this Court had authority to enter its Order Re Post-Trial Motions. Thus, the Eaton exception applies.

Ruling

There is no just reason to delay appeal of the Order Re Post-Trial motions.

COST BILLS

Plaintiff Deborah Williams has submitted a revised cost bill. No objections have been filed. Ms. William's request will therefore be approved.

The defendants are now the prevailing parties with respect to the claims asserted by Dan Glass, David Schudel, Craig Thompson, Tim Schudel, and Sandra Schudel. The defendants move the Court (Ct. Rec. 274) for an order indicating that they have ten days from Rule 54(b) certification to file cost bills. Their request will be granted.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

1. The defendants' motion to amend (Ct. Rec. 574) is granted. Ms. Sandra Schudel's claims against the defendants are dismissed with prejudice.

2. The defendants' motion for a conditional ruling (Ct. Rec. 574) is granted in part. The defendants' prior motion for a new trial (Ct. Rec. 486) is denied with respect to all plaintiffs.

3. The Hopkins' motion for reconsideration (Ct. Rec. 580) is denied except as indicated above.

4. The parties respective motions for Rule 54(b) certification (Ct. Recs. 574, 577) are granted.

(a) There is no just reason to delay appellate review of the Court's Order Re Post-Trial Motions (Ct. Rec. 571); and

(b) Since the Clerk has already entered judgment as directed by the Order Re Post-Trial Motions, that judgment (Ct. Rec. 572) will become the final judgment for purposes of Rule 54(b) upon entry of this order.

5. Deborah Williams's cost bill is approved.

6. The defendants are to submit a cost bill with respect to the claims of Dan Glass, David Schudel, Craig Thompson, Tim Schudel, and Sandra Schudel within ten days of entry of this order.

7. Any other pending motions are denied as moot.

IT IS ORDERED. The Clerk is hereby directed to file this order, furnish copies to counsel, and close the case.

DATED this 13 day of January 1995.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(a)

(a) Judgment as a Matter of Law.
(1) If during a trial by jury a party has been fully heard on an issue and there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find for that party on that issue, the court may determine the issue against that party and may grant a motion for judgment as a matter of law against that party with respect to a claim . . . that cannot under the controling law be maintained . . . without a favorable finding on that issue.

(1994 version).

Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b)

(b) Renewal of Motion for Judgment After Trial; Alternative Motion for New Trial. Whenever a motion for a judgment as a matter of law made at the close of all the evidence is denied or for any reason is not granted, the court is deemed to have submitted the action to the jury subject to a later determination of the legal questions raised by the motion. Such a motion may be renewed by service and filing not later than 10 days after entry of judgment. A motion for a new trial under Rule 59(b) may be joined with a renewal of the motion for judgment as a matter of law, or a new trial may be requested in the alternative. If a verdict was returned, the court may, in disposing of the renewed motion, allow the judgment to stand or may reopen the judgment and either order a new trial or direct the entry of judgment as a matter of law. If no verdict was returned, the court may, in disposing of the renewed motion, direct the entry of judgment as a matter of law or may order a new trial.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b)

(b) Renewing Motion for Judgment After Trial: Alternative Motion for a New Trial. If, for any reason, the court does not grant a motion for judgment as a matter of law made at the close of all evidence, the court is considered to have submitted the action to the jury subject to the court's later deciding the legal questions raised by the motion. The movant may renew its request for judgment as a matter of law by filing a motion no later than 10 days after entry of judgment – and may alternatively request a new trial or join a motion for a new trial under Rule 59. In ruling on a renewed motion, the court may:

1. If a verdict was returned:

   (A) Allow the judgments to stand,

   (B) Order a new trial, or

(C) Direct entry of judgment as a matter of law; or

2. If no verdict was returned:

(A) Order a new trial, or

(B) Direct entry of judgment as a matter of law.

(d) On Initiative of Court. Not later than 10 days after entry of judgment the court on its own initiative may order a new trial for any reason for which it might have granted a new trial on motion of a party. After giving the parties notice and an opportunity to be heard on the matter, the court may grant a motion for a new trial, timely served, for a reason not stated in the motion. In either case, the court shall specify in the order the grounds therefor.

(d) On Court's Initiative; Notice; Specifying Grounds. No later than 10 days after entry of judgment the court, on its own, may order a new trial for any reason that would justify granting one on a party's motion. After giving the parties notice and an opportunity to be heard, the court may grant a timely motion for a new trial for a reason not stated in the motion. When granting a new trial on its own initiative or for a reason not stated in a motion, the court shall specify the grounds in its order.

(Amended version of rule effective December 1, 1995).

The Supreme Court order dated April 27, 1995, found at 131 L.Ed.2d xcii, provides as follows:

ORDERED:

1. That the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for the United States District Courts be, and they hereby are, amended by including therein amendments to Civil Rules 50, 52, 59, and 83.

2. That the foregoing amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure shall take effect on December 1, 1995, and shall govern all proceedings in civil cases thereafter commenced, and, insofar as just and practicable, all proceedings and civil cases then pending.

3. That THE CHIEF JUSTICE be, and hereby is, authorized to transmit to the congress the foregoing amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in accordance with the provisions of Section 2072 of Title 28, United States Code [28 U.S.C.S. Section 2072].

AMENDMENT V OF UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

CAPITAL CRIMES; DOUBLE JEOPARDY; SELF-INCRIMINATION; DUE PROCESS; JUST COMPENSATION FOR PROPERTY

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in the time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy in life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

AMENDMENT VII OF UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

CIVIL TRIALS

In Suits of common law, where the value and controversy shall exceed $20.00, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
